Solarize program offers limited-time discounts to local residents;Next workshop scheduled for Saturday, October 10

Farmingville, NY – On September 12, Supervisor Ed Romaine and Councilwoman Connie Kept attended the Solarize Brookhaven program solar awareness workshop at Brookhaven Town Hall. The event was held to help residents obtain the most cost effective pricing for installing solar on their homes by bringing together groups of potential solar customers with a solar installation company that offers competitive and transparent pricing. The program is funded through a grant awarded to the Town of Brookhaven by the New York State Energy Research and Development Authority (NYSERDA). Pictured at left is Supervisor Ed Romaine presenting opening remarks at the workshop. Pictured at right are Mike Bailis, Vice President/Executive Solar Designer of SUNation (left) and Councilwoman Connie Kept (right).

Brookhaven Town and its partners Suffolk County Community College and Renewable Energy Long Island will hold another solar awareness workshop on Saturday, October 10, from 10:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. at Brookhaven Town Hall, 1 Independence Hill in Farmingville. More information about Solarize Brookhaven can be found by visiting www.brookhaven.org or by contacting SUNation Solar at 631-750-9454.

Supervisor Romaine said, "Saturday's workshop was a big success and I thank all the residents who stopped by. This program provides the opportunity for homeowners and businesses to make a positive impact on the environment and save money on energy bills. I encourage those who are interested to attend our next event and take advantage of this great program."
